Leather is a natural , durable and flexible material that is obtained from tanning the raw skin of animals, especially cows. The tanning process transforms perishable leather into a stable, permanent and flexible natural material for various applications.

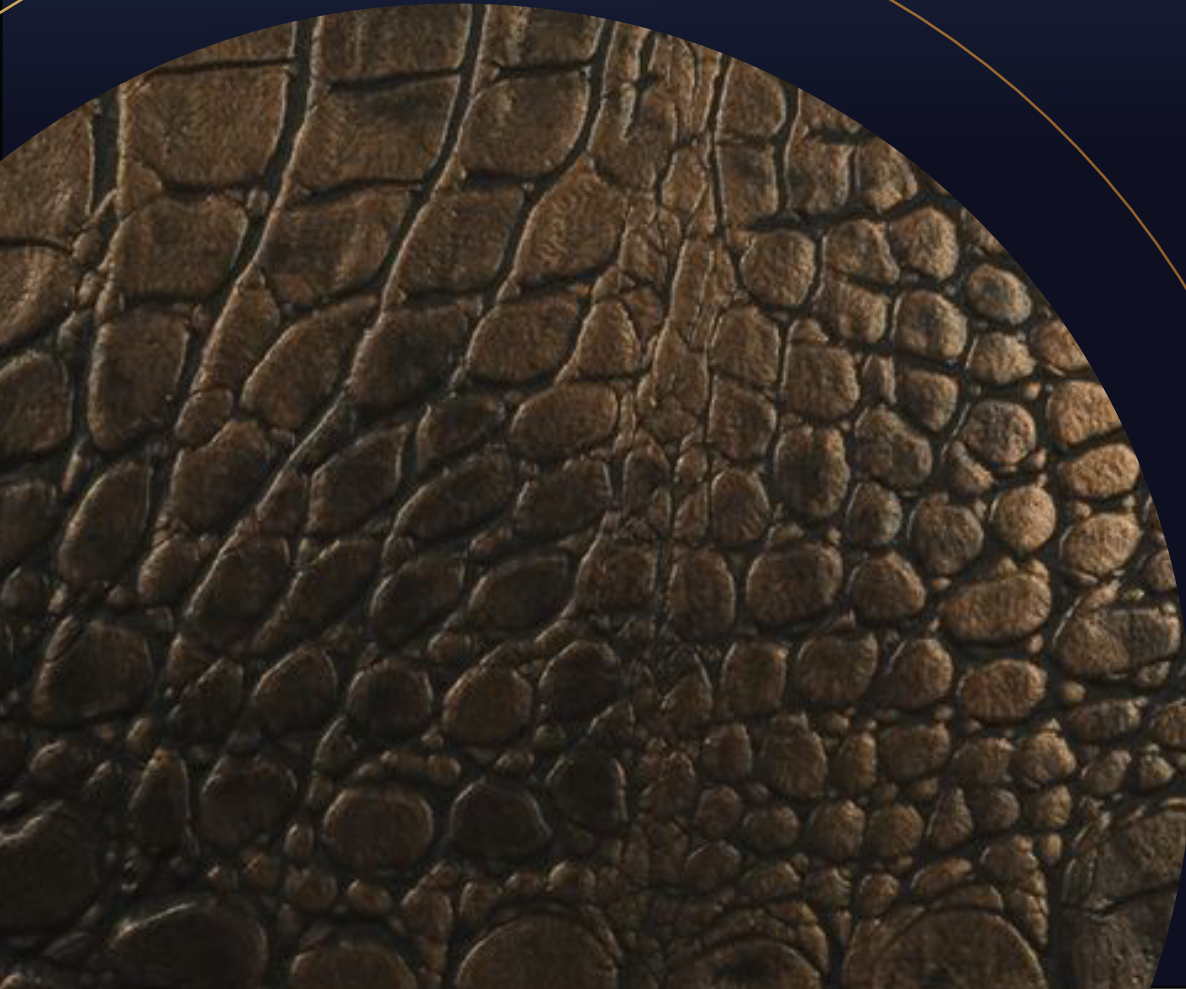

Light leather

Light leather is leather that is made from the skin of animals whose skin is very thin and delicate, animals such as goats and lambs. This type of leather is usually used in the production of clothes, gloves and jackets. Or in its low quality, it is also used in the production of lining

Semi-Heavy Leather

Semi-heavy leather is made from the skin of animals that have relatively thick skin. Animals such as whales, crocodiles and ostriches are suitable cases for making this type of leather. Due to its difficulty and rarity, this type of leather is used in the production of luxury and decorative products.

Heavy Leather

Heavy leather is one of the most loved and widely used leather in the market. This leather is made from the skin of animals such as cows, buffaloes and camels. Due to its strength and durability, heavy leather is used in the production of shoe soles and uppers, car belts, and handbags
